

Pet Insurance- Linda Schneider, VMD

Chances are an accident or serious illness will strike your pet at some point during its lifetime. Today veterinarians diagnose and treat many of the same ailments that affect humans such as, ear and/or skin problems, broken bones, cancer, and heart disease. Although veterinary services often cost less than 10% of comparable procedures in human medicine, quality pet care can easily add up to hundreds even thousands of dollars.

Big medical bills often present pet owners with tough choices. Too often pet owners aren't financially prepared for their pet's medical costs. Pet health insurance helps owners handle veterinary bills and assure the best care for a healthier, longer life for your pet. Veterinary Pet Insurance (VPI) is one company whose only interest is to provide protection and financial assistance to pet owners. Through VPI, various plans are offered and you may take your pet to the veterinarian of your choice. In general, monthly payments that can comfortably fit into the family budget are available depending on the policy plan and age of the pet. Some plans even cover routine vaccinations, heartworm testing, neutering, flea control, de-worming, and dental care.

To find out more about pet health insurance, ask your veterinarian or call VPI at 1-800-USA-PETS or on the website www.petinsurance.com.
